Pre-Employment Background Investigation: Perspectives on the Process

Instructor:
Ed Preston

Chief Ed Preston is a United States Marine Corps and was deployed as part Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. Upon leaving active duty, he began his civilian law enforcement career with the New Bern Police Department (NC), rising through the ranks to become the Deputy Chief of Police after serving as the Officer in Charge of the New Bern Police Department Narcotics Unit, Patrol Shift Supervisor, Operations Division Commander, and Commander of the Office of Professional Standards. He developed the New Bern Police Department Special Response Team and has Commanded Officers in hurricane relief operations in Eastern North Carolina. In March of 2011, he retired from the New Bern Police when he was appointed Chief of Police for the Morgantown Police Department.

Ed has attended Craven Community College, Liberty University and earned a Bachelor of Criminal Justice Administration Degree from Mount Olive College before being awarded his Juris Doctorate from Concord Law School. He is currently an adjunct professor for Salem International University and is guest lecturer at West Virginia University.

He is the Law Enforcement Committee Co-Chairman of the U.S. Attorney's Office Anti-Addiction Action Plan for North Central WV and is a member of the Appalachian High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area (HIDTA) oversight board for West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky. He was the former Vice President of the Eastern Carolina Law Enforcement Executives Association and past President of the Mountaineer Civitan Club. He is currently a member of the WV Chief's of Police Association, International Chief's of Police Association and the Police Executive Research Forum. In 2018 he was a signatory member of the John's Hopkins University Research Project "Ten Standards of Care: Policing and the Opioid Crisis" and is the co-author of "West Virginia Crimes" published by Blue-360 media.

Pre-Employment Background Investigation: Perspectives on the Process

Course Objectives:

Pre-Employment Background Investigations used for the Chief Executive Officer of a Law Enforcement Agency (or any company for that matter) to make the choice to gamble on hiring a particular individual. The more critical, sensitive in nature, or the more autonomously the employee will be expected to work, the more the need for a complete, accurate and in depth background investigation to be.

During this period of instruction you will be presented with a variety of information. This course is not designed to teach you step by step how to do background investigations, nor is this course designed to dictate the policy of any agency. Quite the contrary, this course is designed as a means in assisting you and your agencies develop a comprehensive policy and procedure as it relates to pre-employment background investigations, present you the student with various scenarios, events, circumstances and through this presentation you will develop a rough checklist to return to your agency and begin working out what works best for you.

As I begin every class I wish to pass on to you these words for the classroom “If the Student failed to learn, the Teacher failed to Teach”.

The goals of this course of instruction will be:

- Importance of the Pre-Employment Background Investigation
- What may or may not be asked during an investigation
- Federal laws relating to employment of the handicapped
- Various resources that may be used during the course of an investigation
- Pre-Employment interview techniques
- Various tests that can be used in background investigations

Training Seminar Practical Public Information New and Established PIOs

Instructor: Miriam Dickler

Miriam Dickler is the former Director of Communications for the City of Charlottesville, Virginia.

In her six years with Charlottesville, she served as primary city spokesperson, led a staff of four and an office responsible for media relations, public relations, community engagement, web and social media content and the City's three PEG television stations.

The Charlottesville Director of Communications is also the Lead Public Information Officer (PIO) for Emergency Management, the City's Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) Officer and a senior advisor to the City Manager.

Prior to working for Charlottesville, Ms. Dickler served in a similar role as the first full-time Public Information Officer for the City of Harrisonburg, Virginia, building that city's communications operation from the ground up.

Over the course of her career in local government, she was the primary communications official for multiple events that attracted widespread national attention and responsible for directing teams of local and regional communications professionals through those events and their aftermaths.

In early 2018, Ms. Dickler stepped away from local government communications to explore new opportunities. She is currently working with James Madison University in Harrisonburg to design a local and state government continuing education curriculum. She also consults independently for individuals and organizations.

Ms. Dickler is proud to have been called "one of the best PR professionals" and "a dedicated communications miracle worker" by her colleagues. She lives in Charlottesville with her husband.

Leadership Through Understanding Emotional Intelligence and Human Behavior

Due to the nature, visibility, and impact of law enforcement services on society, the occupation is highly scrutinized regarding its tough demands on personnel and leadership to meet increasing public expectations. As a result of this complex and dynamic landscape, modern officers need more than tactical expertise and an old, autocratic style to succeed. Because of the rapid and ever-changing landscape of the profession, law enforcement officers may require more than just task competencies or technical know-how. Officers possessing a particular blend of skills, competencies, and traits are more likely to be successful. Law enforcement officers need to develop healthy relationships and manage conflict while achieving productive goals. To achieve their goals, law enforcement officers need skills to build, maintain, and strengthen alliances and partnerships, both within and outside an organization. Effective law enforcement officers need to maintain the respect and support of not only the rank and file but also the community at large, to do this they need EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

Course Objectives:

- Explain the importance of developing emotional intelligence in order to create change and enhance leadership
- Explain the four basic components of emotional intelligence
- Explain and compare the competencies that make up emotional intelligence
- Articulate the emotional intelligence competencies common to star performers in law enforcement leadership
- Analyze and discuss the EQ-i reports.
- Practice emotional intelligence skills development.

Participant Requirements:

Participants must be prepared to participate in interactive classroom exercises. In addition to lecture and discussion, participants are expected to record key information on the participant handout materials and take personal notes. Throughout the program participants will be involved in individual and group activities where they apply the concepts being presented in class and share their findings by presenting their individual or group's ideas and applications to the rest of the class. Thus, all participants will derive the added benefits of learning from each other, and enhance their understanding and appreciation of each other. Participants should also be prepared for group work in Problem-Based Learning (PBL) where they solve problems and resolve issues using a PBL methodology. With PBL, the participants select or are given "problems" (or issues) to resolve; they must discuss and/or search out the facts and information.
