

The Green Belt Network

"In every community across our city, the enthusiasm is high for trails as a system of healthy transportation, community connections and active lifestyle. Pulling together a system of Green Belts makes this one of the most inclusive trail systems in the country." Tony Collins, Director, Columbus Recreation and Parks

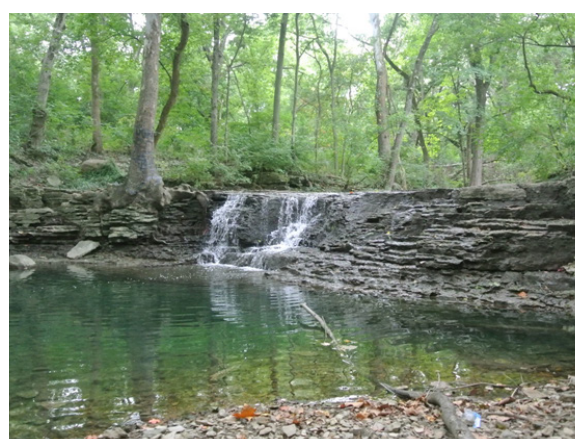

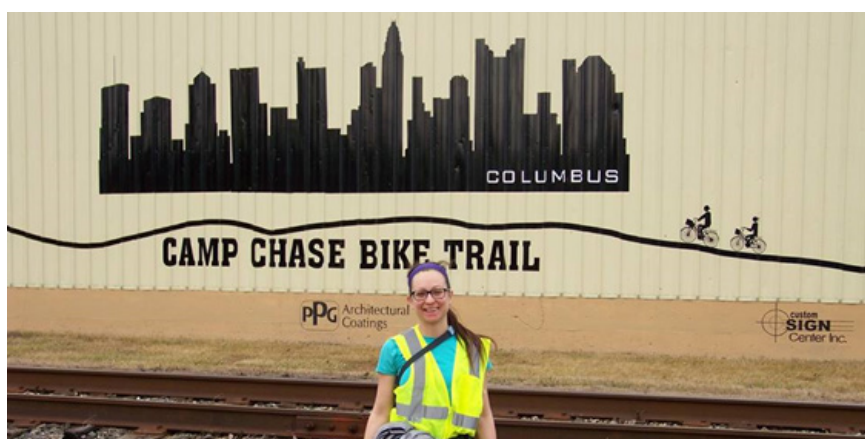

The six Green Belts now under development by Columbus Recreation and Parks are a network of over 92 miles of trails winding throughout the urban fabric of the city.

Some of the region's most famous trails – the Olentangy, Alum Creek, Scioto, Blacklick, Camp Chase and Big Walnut – will form a system of interconnected loops in Columbus. Ranging from four to 32 miles long, these beltways will offer new ways to experience great parks, neighborhoods, culture and some of the best scenery in the city.

Columbus Recreation and Parks' five year plan, in tandem with our close partners within Central Ohio Greenways (COG), looks to build 17 trail projects towards the Green Belts network.

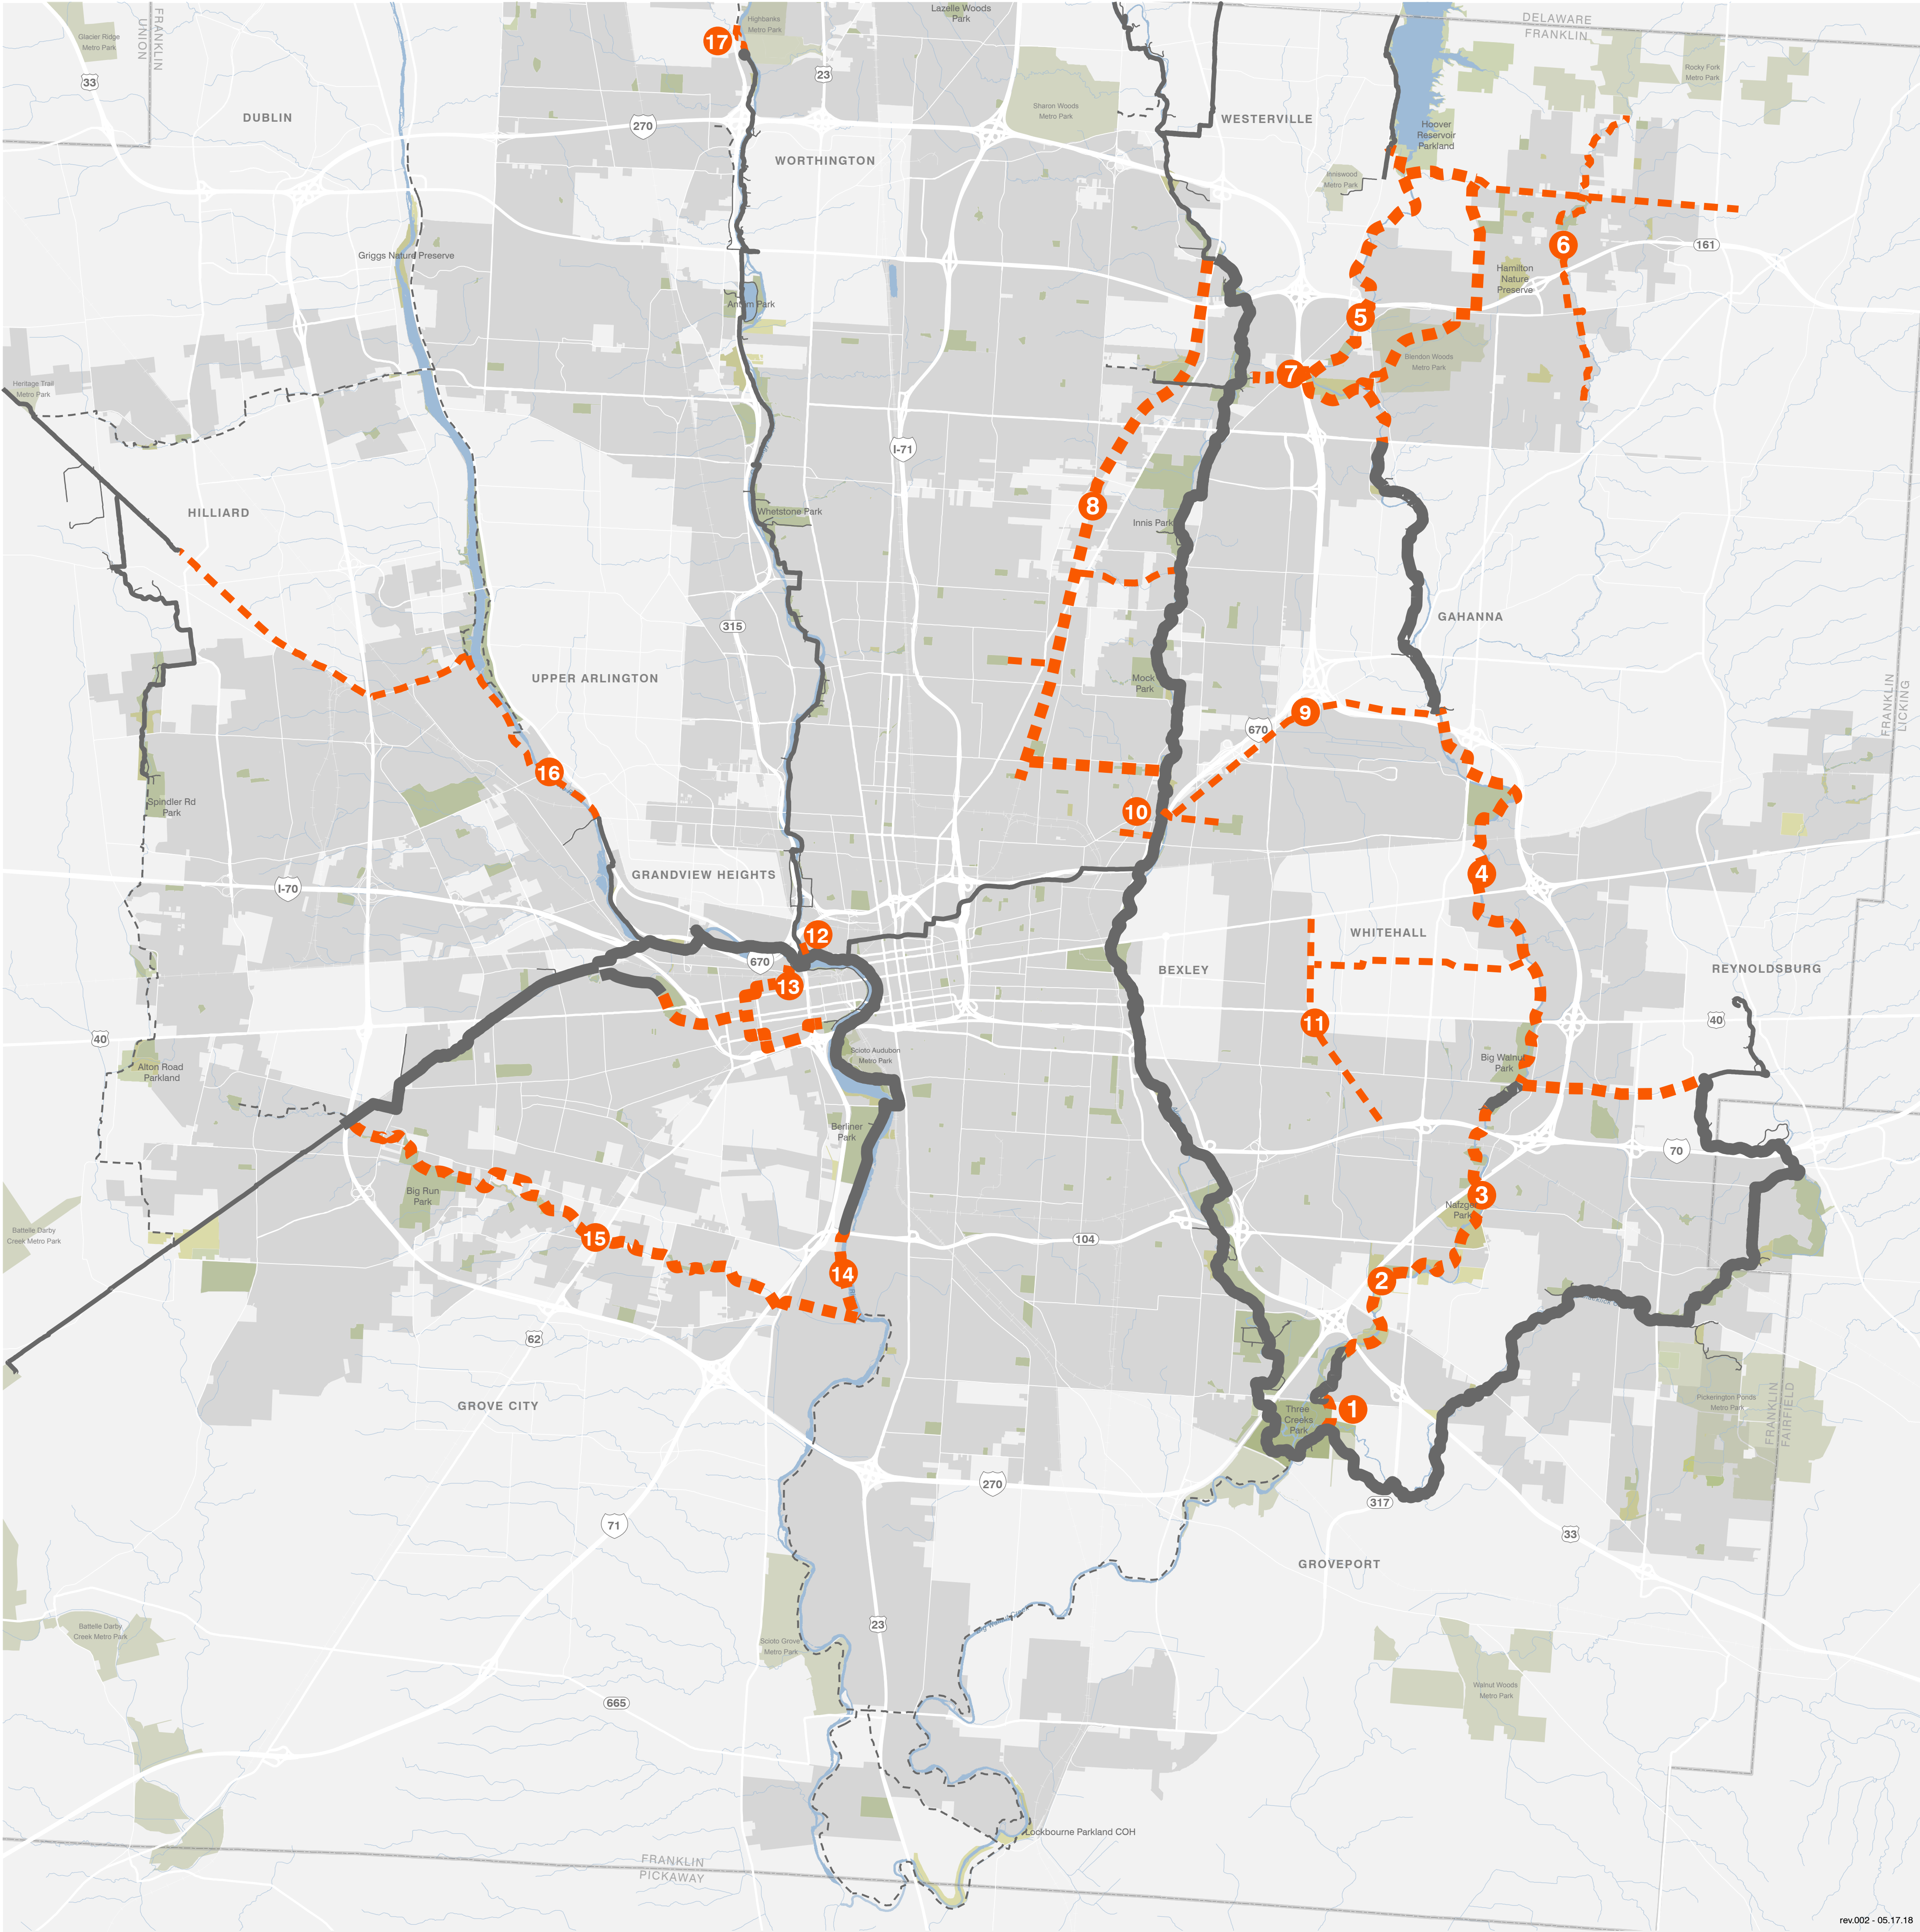

Visit centralohiogreenways.com often to keep up with new developments, photos and interaction with thousands of trail users.
