

Tanisha Robinson

After serving as an Arabic Linguist in the US Army, Tanisha Robinson studied Arabic and Political Theory at The Ohio State University. Upon receiving a fellowship, she moved to Damascus, Syria, and worked in women's and human rights throughout the Middle East for almost two years.

Upon her return to Columbus, she built and sold an affiliate marketing portfolio, and went on to become the founder of Fudha.com, a daily deal site focused on locally owned, independent restaurants. 614 Media Group purchased Fudha.com in Summer 2011.

Tanisha is currently the co-founder of Print Syndicate, a design/technology/marketing company with an ecommerce platform devoted to providing well-designed, socially relevant, high quality products to consumers, on-demand.

She is also the co-founder of TicketFire, a mobile app that allows paper ticket holders to scan and digitize their event tickets, and then use, transfer, or sell those tickets to others.

Tanisha serves on the board of Columbus College of Art and Design (CCAD), the Greater Columbus Arts Council (GCAC) and Harmony Project.
