DISCOVERING PUBLIC ART

Finding Time: Columbus Public Art 2012 is taking place in public spaces, plazas, parks, streets, and alleys throughout the downtown during the Bicentennial year. The program is transforming downtown into an open-air gallery with temporary public art projects by more than 50 international, national, and local artists.

Reflecting the broad range of contemporary public art in multiple forms and media, projects range from the familiar—sculpture and murals—to unexpected installations, sound works, performances, and works in non-traditional sites, including COTA buses and church bells. These site-specific artworks explore the physical and philosophical measurement of time, generating questions on the notion of time, passing of time, use of time, measurement of time, the chronology of life, world time, and the notion of temporary and permanent.

Taking an Art Walk is a unique way to get active while discovering interesting, thought-provoking public art in Downtown Columbus.

In all, there will be 12 projects in Finding Time: Columbus Public Art 2012. Some, such as the Urban Plein Air Paintings, have multiple artists. At the time of this printing, six projects are on view; others will be installed throughout the summer and fall.
